19° LOFT	59° LIE

FITTED AT 5'8" & UNDER

Easier to get airborne

A 3-iron and a 19° hybrid go roughly the same distance in the right hands. The difference is what happens in the wrong ones, because the hybrid gets airborne from lies where the iron simply doesn't.

FITTED AT 6'1 & OVER

Easier to keep straight

A 5-wood and a 19° hybrid cover similar ground, and the hybrid is the shorter club at 42.5". That's why it's easier to find the middle of, and why it holds a line off a tight lie.

STILL DECIDING

WHICH ONE'S MINE?

If it's still a coin flip after this, write to us and a person answers.

Which wedge loft should I start with?

Keep four to six degrees between your wedges and each one gets its own yardage. Tell us your pitching wedge loft and we'll do the math.

K grind or S grind?

The K is the one you set up square and trust from anywhere, in every loft. The S has a narrower sole, so it opens up clean when you like to lay the face open around the green.

Blade or mallet?

It comes down to the ones you miss. The blade feels planned and tells you exactly where you struck it. The mallet spreads its weight out, so the misses stay closer to your line.

What does the hybrid replace?

It slots in where a 3-iron or a 5-wood would go, and the panels above lay out both.

What if it's not the one?

Every club gets sixty days. Talk to us first: club returns need our OK, and a few photos, and the club has to come back in brand-new condition.
